The Office of Strategic Services (OSS) Society is a charitable organization that honors the historic accomplishments of the OSS during World War II, the first organized effort by the United States to implement a centralized system of strategic intelligence and the predecessor to the Central Intelligence Agency, the U.S. Special Operations Command, and the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research. It educates the American public about the importance of strategic intelligence and special operations to the preservation of freedom.

“Hearts beat strongest in response to noble ideals.”
—Dr. Ralph J. Bunche
